Beethoven

The Story of a Little Boy
Who Was Forced to Practice
BORN

__________________________

DIED

__________________________
The Story of a Little Boy who was Forced to Practice

Ludwig van Beethoven was born in the lovely town of Bonn, on the River Rhine, December 16, 1770.

The house in which he spent his boyhood is still standing. We see in the picture what a pretty, homelike place the house and the yard must have been. It is now the Beethoven House, or Museum, filled with mementos of the great composer. There you may see music pages written by him, letters, medals, instruments; even his ear trumpet is there.

Beethoven’s father was a singer at the Chapel of the Elector. He was not a good father, for he did not care to work even enough to make his family comfortable. But Beethoven’s mother loved her boy with all her heart, as we shall see.
Ludwig was only four years old when he began to study music. Like children of today, he shed many a tear over the first lessons. In the beginning, his father taught him piano and violin and forced him to practice. At school he learned, just as we do today, reading, writing, arithmetic, and later on, Latin.

Once Ludwig turned thirteen, he did not go to school for he had to work and earn his living.

Do you wonder what kind of a boy he was?

We are told that he was shy and quiet. He talked little and took no interest in the games that his boy and girl companions played.

While Ludwig was in school, he played at a concert for the first time. He was then eight years old. Two years later, he had composed quite a number of pieces. One of these was printed. It was called Variations on Dressler’s March. On the title page of this piece, it said:

VARIATIONS ON DRESSLER’S MARCH
Composed by a Young Amateur
LOUIS VAN BEETHOVEN
Aged ten years, 1780

Then the little boy studied with a teacher named Christian Gottlob Neefe, who took real interest in him. Neefe did not, as was said of Beethoven’s father, to punish the little boy severely to keep him at his practice, hour after hour.

Often when Neefe had to travel, Ludwig took his teacher’s place as organist at the Court. With the organ lessons, there were other lessons in harmony. So rapidly did the boy improve that his teacher said one day:

“If he goes on as he has begun, he will someday be a second Mozart.”

Our young hero of thirteen was surely busy every hour of the day. He played in an orchestra, as accompanist. He gave lessons, played the organ in church, studied the violin, and kept up his work in composition. He always kept a notebook for musical ideas.

Most every child these days has more and better opportunities than Beethoven had when he was a child. Here is a picture of the funny old organ in the Minorite Church of Bonn upon which Beethoven played when he was a little boy.

Look at the funny stops at the top and compare it with the best organ in your own town. This is little better than a toy beside our fine organs of today, yet it was the best that Beethoven had to practice upon. When Neefe said he would probably be a second Mozart, the words filled Ludwig with a great desire. On his sixteenth birthday, what do you think happened? Why, he set out from Bonn to Vienna, where Mozart lived.

But scarcely had he begun to feel at home in Vienna when news came to him that his mother was ill. She had always been a good mother, kind of heart, great of hope for her little boy, and probably she sympathized with the hard lot that made him have to work so early in life. When he learned of her sickness, he hastened to Bonn.

"Who was happier," he said to one of his friends, "than I, so long as I was able to speak the sweet name of Mother and know that she heard me?"

Vienna had given him a wonderful happiness. He met Mozart and had some lessons from him in composition. When he played for the great master, Mozart tip-toed from the room and said softly to those present:

"Pay heed to this boy. He will surely make a noise in the world someday."

After his mother’s death, he determined that he would remain there. And it was not until he talked with Joseph Haydn, who stopped at Bonn on his way to London, that he decided once more to journey to Vienna. Beethoven was twenty-two years old at the time he met Papa Haydn. Beethoven showed the master some of his compositions. Haydn urged him to go at once to Vienna, promising to give him lessons in composition on his return from London.

Everywhere in Vienna Beethoven was a welcome guest. He was proud (but in the right way), very honest, always straightforward, and independent. But, like his mother, he was warm-hearted and as true as could be. There was nothing in his nature that was mean, or cruel, or wrong in any way. He took pride in his talent and worked hard to perfect himself in it.

Here is what Beethoven’s handwriting looked like:

Bit by bit, the great power of Beethoven as a pianist became known. He played much among his friends, but he did not like to perform in public.

A story is told that once he was to play his C major Concerto at a concert. When he arrived at the hall, he found the piano was tuned so low that he had to play the Concerto in C# major.

You know how hard it is to transpose a simple piece, but think of transposing a concerto and playing it with an orchestra without time for practice!

Do you sometimes wonder what the great composer looked like? Beethoven lived outside of Vienna and often took long walks in the country. Once a little boy ten years of age was taken by his father to visit Beethoven. Carl Czerny must have been a very observant boy for he wrote out a description of how Beethoven looked. This is the little boy’s picture as a man:

And this is the description he gave of Beethoven.
“Beethoven was dressed in a dark gray jacket and trousers of some long-haired material, which reminded me of the description of Robinson Crusoe I had just been reading. The jet-black hair stood upright on his head. A beard, unshaven for several days, made still darker his naturally swarthy face. I noticed also, with a child’s quick perception, that he had cotton wool which seemed to have been dipped in some yellow fluid in both ears. His hands were covered with hair, and the fingers were very broad, especially at the tips.”

You know, of course, that when we think of music we think of hearing it. We think how it sounds to us. A lover of music loves to hear its tones and to feel its rhythm.

Like every other human being, Beethoven loved music in just this way. He loved its sounds as they fell on the ear. As colors delight our eyes, so tones fell with delight upon the ears of this man.

Beethoven was once invited to play at the home of a nobleman, but upon being informed that he would be expected to go as a servant, he indignantly rejected the proposal.

Beethoven had many friends and was fond of them. They knew that he was a genius and were glad to forget some of the very strange things he did when he got angry. Here is a picture of the great master seated among a group of his friends. Although Beethoven was odd, his friends loved him.

From the time he was about thirty years old, his hearing grew gradually worse. Indeed, it was necessary for him to have a piano specially constructed with additional wires so that he could hear.

Can you think of anything more terrible?

Yet he went on, day after day, composing beautiful music as he walked the fields, or as he sat at his table. For we must remember that he could hear his own music in his thoughts. That is, the mind that made the music could hear it, though the ear itself was forever closed to the sound of it.

Year after year he continued to write symphonies and concertos, sonatas, songs, choral and chamber music.
And year after year the poor ears closed a little more and still a little more, until finally not even the loudest noises could penetrate them.

Yet he worked bravely, writing every beautiful musical thought that came to him so that the world, and that means all of us, might have them. When Beethoven was dying in 1827, Schubert called upon him and remained with him for some time.
SOME FACTS ABOUT BEETHOVEN

Read these facts about Ludwig van Beethoven and try to write his story out of them, using your own words.

1. The composer’s full name was Ludwig van Beethoven.
2. He was born at Bonn on the River Rhine. (Look for Bonn on the map.)
3. His birthday is December 16, and his birth year was 1770.
4. The Beethoven House is now a museum.
5. Beethoven’s father was a singer.
6. Ludwig began to study music at the age of four.
7. He was shy and quiet in school, always thinking even then of music.
8. Even as a little boy he composed music.
9. When he was ten years old, his first published composition appeared.
10. A teacher who helped him very much was Christian Gottlob Neefe.
11. Beethoven learned to play several instruments.
12. He went to Vienna when he was sixteen, met Mozart, and had lessons from him.
13. Later, Beethoven met Haydn at Bonn.
14. On Haydn’s advice, he returned to Vienna, making it his home for the rest of his life.
15. Carl Czerny once called on Beethoven and wrote a fine description of him.
16. At about thirty, Beethoven became deaf.
17. Most of the great symphonies were composed after he lost his hearing.
18. Beethoven died March 26, 1827, at the age of 57.
SOME QUESTIONS

1. When and where was Beethoven born?

2. Who was his first teacher?

3. What did his father do?

4. How long did little Ludwig go to school?

5. What description of him as a boy in school has been given?

6. How old was he when he first played in public?

7. What composition of his was first to be published?

8. Which of his teachers took great interest in him?

9. What did he say about the little boy’s future?

10. Where did Beethoven go when he was sixteen years old?

11. With what two great masters did he study?

12. What composer, as a little boy, went to see Beethoven?

13. How did he describe him?

14. Name some of the forms of music which Beethoven composed.

15. Write a list of music by Beethoven that you have heard.

16. How old was Beethoven when he died?
SOME QUESTIONS

ANSWER KEY

1. When and where was Beethoven born?
   A. December 16, 1770, in the town of Bonn

2. Who was his first teacher?
   A. His father

3. What did his father do?
   A. He was a singer at the Chapel of the Elector

4. How long did little Ludwig go to school?
   A. Until he was thirteen

5. What description of him as a boy in school has been given?
   A. We are told that he was shy and quiet. He talked little and took no interest in the games that his boy and girl companions played.

6. How old was he when he first played in public?
   A. Eight years old

7. What composition of his was first to be published?
   A. Variations on Dressler’s March

8. Which of his teachers took great interest in him?
   A. Christian Gottlob Neefe

9. What did he say about the little boy’s future?
   A. “If he goes on as he has begun, he will someday be a second Mozart.”

10. Where did Beethoven go when he was sixteen years old?
    A. Vienna
11. With what two great masters did he study?
   A. Mozart and Haydn

12. What composer, as a little boy, went to see Beethoven?
   A. Carl Czerny

13. How did he describe him?
   A. “Beethoven was dressed in a dark gray jacket and trousers of some long-haired material, which reminded me of the description of Robinson Crusoe I had just been reading. The jet-black hair stood upright on his head. A beard, unshaven for several days, made still darker his naturally swarthy face. I noticed also, with a child’s quick perception, that he had cotton wool which seemed to have been dipped in some yellow fluid in both ears. His hands were covered with hair, and the fingers were very broad, especially at the tips.”

14. Name some of the forms of music which Beethoven composed.
   A. Symphonies, concertos, sonatas, songs, choral music, chamber music

15. Write a list of music by Beethoven that you have heard.
   A. Answers will vary.

16. How old was Beethoven when he died?
   A. 57